Tell Video Game Retailers: Don't Sell Call of Duty: Black Ops! Gory Game Simulates Assassination of Fidel Castro

“Call of Duty; Black Ops” is an M-rated video game, set in Cuba, the Soviet Union, and Vietnam, in which the player joins the Bay of Pigs invasion and then carves bloody mayhem through Cuba with the mission to assassinate a young Fidel Castro. Atlantic magazine reviewer, Sam Machkovech, wrote of the advertising for the game, “Activision's ad...comes closer to selling real death than any video game possibly could. I'm not buying it.”

And our children shouldn't either. This video game is so violent that it has been censored in Germany and Japan. The game went on sale on Nov. 9 in 4,400 outlets nationwide. Wal-Mart, Best Buy, and dozens of other retailers in your community are today dealing this pornography to the children in our communities. It is part of the whole culture of US militarism with the entertainment industry's role being to desensitize us to violence. Our children are the most vulnerable.

Take action now to derail the industry projection that Call to Duty: Black Ops will be the biggest video game seller of the holiday season. Tell the retailers in your community that the game is a violation of your community's values and you demand that they take it off their shelves.
